

What a beautiful month April has been! As we jumped into spring and celebrated Easter, we get to see all of the flowers start to bloom and I LOVE seeing all of the bluebonnets popping up along the roadside in Texas.

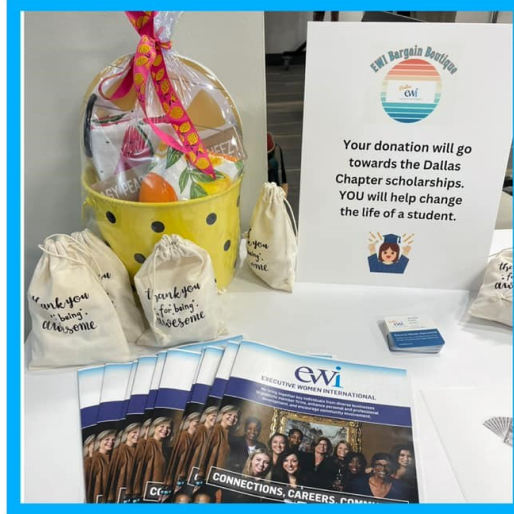

It reminds me that our chapter is BLOOMING and growing and it is an exciting time to be a part of EWI.

We are seeing new members in the Dallas Chapter and we are excited to share the mission of EWI and our enthusiasm of CONNECTIONS, CAREERS AND COMMUNITY. Speaking of COMMUNITY, we are preparing for our fundraising event in May where we get the privilege of awarding scholarships to graduating high school seniors and adults in transition. The chapter held their Bargain Boutique in the conference room at the building of member firm Neuberger Berman and invited the chapter, guests and anyone working in the building. The chapter raised over $300 and then was able to donate the remainder of the clothes and accessories collected to Attitudes & Attire. Attitudes & Attire® is a nonprofit organization dedicated to promoting personal growth for women seeking self-sufficiency. Our program provides the tools that raise self-esteem, promote ethics and build the confidence necessary to develop successful life skills. Our vision is to build confidence and change lives of the women we serve. I love that we get to help empower women in our community. I can't wait to be able to share all the recipients of the scholarships in our May newsletter.

Until then, Dream, Dare and Deliver!

Jennifer

A HUGE shoutout to everyone who joined us and/or contributed to our first EWI Bargain Boutique!! It was a smashing success!! And a special thanks to Corena Mitchell from Attitudes and Attire for speaking to us about their programs geared toward getting women back on their feet. All of the clothes, shoes, bags and accessories which were not purchased were donated to Attitudes and Attire.

Don't be Angry at Work

I connected with a new client the other day for about an hour. For the first 30 minutes of the conversation, she was basically yelling at me. She was mad. But not at me. She was frustrated with her boss, disappointed in her organization, and fed up with her circumstances.

As a coach, it's my job to be a safe harbor. I want clients to feel safe to show up as they are and express themselves fully, so I listened patiently and sincerely. When she finished saying her piece, I asked her if she often felt this angry. She was silent momentarily before responding, "I'm not angry. I'm just exhausted." Blind spots are named appropriately; sometimes, we just can't see where we are. While she might have been tired, she was angry and didn't see it.

There's a high degree of anger in the workplace right now. And yes, feeling undervalued, exhausted, and burnout is likely behind it. No matter what's fueling it, anger at work is not productive. Emotions are never bad or wrong; as leaders, we have to recognize them, understand them, and work to harness heightened ones in professional settings.

Anger is a defense mechanism that can prevent us from being fully accountable for our actions. In the moment, it can feel great to be fed up and fired up, yet it can tarnish your credibility long past the outburst. Anger is typically a sign that change, or acceptance, is needed. Successful leaders recognize anger as a warning sign that they need to make different choices. They don't act in anger. Instead, they process, move through it, and reflect on what needs improvement. Anger is a catalyst, yet a poor life companion. You want to understand it as fast as you can.

If you've been angry at work lately, search for the root cause. Are you ...

- Exhausted?
- Overwhelmed?
- Dealing with a difficult boss?
- Undervalued?

Don't accept unexplored anger.

Name the source. Then, determine what needs to change and be accountable for making that happen. It's essential to get back to demonstrating the professionalism you value, and others expect from you. It's okay not to be okay. It's not okay to be angry at work.

2023 AT&T Byron Nelson Leadership Share the Event's Estimated Economic Impact

After adding 41 hospitality units, tournament chair Jeff Eckert says 2023 fan attendance will grow and he expects charitable giving to roughly match last year's numbers.

By Ben Swanger | April 19, 2023 | 12:41 pm

As the 2023 AT&T Byron Nelson golf tournament approaches at TPC Craig Ranch in McKinney, those in leadership are working hard to beat the previous year's record-breaking achievements. In 2022, the tournament raised $7.6 million for the Momentous Institute—the most significant raise in the tournament's 54-year history. It also produced an economic impact of $55.4 million in North Texas and was the tournament's first sell-out since 2008. The 2023 tournament chair Jeff Eckert, JLL's president of U.S. agency leasing, is pushing to expand those figures in 2023.

"We want to surpass all those numbers," Eckert said. "The better we do, the more we deliver back to the children and families we work to benefit at the Momentous Institute." With the tournament teeing off in just over two weeks, Eckert's goal is already well within reach. The 2022 tournament produced $22 million in total revenue, with expenses at approximately $14.4 million. So far, the 2023 tournament has already hit $22 million in revenue, and Eckert is aiming to close out around $26 million once the trophy is hoisted. TPC Craig Ranch is building 41 additional hospitality suites—for a total of 171—spurred by last year's high demand.

Most additions are coming to hole 17, now dubbed "Ranch 17." The new hole—which will have the look and feel of the 16th hole at the Waste Management Phoenix Open—will increase capacity from 3,500 fans to 6,000 for 2023. Private hospitality suites are already sold out, but shared hospitality suite tickets and general admission tickets are still available.

After adding 41 hospitality units, tournament chair Jeff Eckert says 2023 fan attendance will grow and he expects charitable giving to roughly match last year's numbers.

By Ben Swanger | April 19, 2023 | 12:41 pm

The hole is now stadium-like and completely closed off. Fans will no longer be able to watch the action on the grass, but two grandstands directly behind the green will accommodate general admission ticket holders. “The 17th hole was very corporate the first two years, but now what we’ve wanted to do—and have been able to do—is create a loud and energetic atmosphere,” Jon Drago said at the AT&T Byron Nelson Media Day on April 18. Another addition to the golf course for tournament weekend is “The Corral.” Sponsored by H-E-B, the shaded area is a family-friendly hospitality corner with several food concepts and nursing and changing stations along the 18th fairway.

Player commitments include back-to-back champion K.H. Lee, Dallas-natives Scottie Scheffler and Jordan Spieth, Ryan Palmer, Adam Scott, Sung Kang, and Jason Duffner. In partnership with the PGA Tour, the tournament will launch an AT&T Byron Nelson tournament app ahead of the weekend equipped with course maps, player tracking capability, hospitality information, and more.

With the Salesmanship Club of Dallas leading the way as the tournament organizer, more than 1,300 volunteers are signed up to work the tournament. Over the last 54 years, the Byron Nelson tournament has raised $180 million for the Momentous Institute. Each year, the weekend is the institute’s most significant fundraising effort. Though revenue numbers will be higher, Eckert estimates increased expenses will make proceeds similar to those given last year.

“The economic environment, with the inflation and expenses, is difficult,” Eckert said. “It costs materially more to build this year’s tournament venue compared to last year. In addition, food costs have increased, and the overall cost of doing business is up, so those headwinds are also facing golf tournaments. But at the end of the day, we’ll deliver a big sales number, and I think we’ll be right around that $7.6 million of giving again this year.”

Looking ahead, Momentous Institute’s executive director, Jessica Gomez, says, “We have worked historically with children, families, therapists, and teachers. But we know we have been in this space for a while and need to innovate. So, we’re working through how to bring these lessons learned to a broader mass: to professionals, golfers, anyone working with children—anyone that is a human. “So, we must de-stigmatize the conversation and give people the tools. We all learn how to brush our teeth, comb our hair, and do math, but what if everyone learned how to care for themselves, their brain, and their emotions, we could change the world.”
